Parenting on a low income

Given the negative effects of financial hardship, and the current economic climate, About Families asked what research could tell us about parenting on a low income. The full report (with references) is available at www.aboutfamilies.org.uk.

About Families is a partnership which supports voluntary and statutory sector organisations to develop evidence-based services to meet the changing needs of parents and families, including those with disabilities.

Key points

- Doing without: Parents experiencing financial hardship ‘do without’ everyday necessities, social activities and holidays, all of which put a strain on parenting and family relationships. Families affected by disability can face additional costs and pressures.
- Living without: Living on a low income can bring multiple stresses such as food and fuel poverty, debt, dispossession, homelessness and restricted social opportunities which can affect family relationships, health and well-being, and contribute to feelings of stigma, isolation and exclusion.
- Managing: Parents use a range of creative and skilful strategies to manage resources. However, this can be stressful and time consuming and women are more likely to bear the responsibility.
- Debt: Attempts to budget can be undermined by life events, benefit changes and employment conditions which can lead to debt.
- Support: Parents in low-income areas tend to have low levels of social support and are least likely to access formal services. While support from family and friends is important, it can be variable, undermined by life events and lack of resources and is not always seen positively in terms of independence and ability to cope.
- Benefits system: The benefits system is often a significant source of confusion and stress for families, including those affected by disability, and many families do not receive all the benefits to which they are entitled.
- Barriers to work: Low-paid and part-time workers can shuttle in and out of work in a ‘low pay – no pay’ cycle and face a range of barriers to entering or remaining in paid employment. Parents in families affected by disability face particular barriers to employment including inflexible employers, discrimination and lack of affordable and appropriate childcare.
- Work/care balance: Sustaining work and family care is difficult and stressful, and involves managing a variety of competing tensions, usually by women.
- Low-income neighbourhoods: People on low incomes are increasingly likely to live alongside others who are materially disadvantaged. Deprived neighbourhoods have inadequate housing and a lack of basic amenities and services, all of which can contribute to stress. However, while levels of poverty are higher in deprived areas, there are more families on low incomes living outside these areas than in them meaning that localised policies alone will not tackle poverty.
- Recession: The recent recession has generated additional burdens for some people already living on low incomes. This is combined with decreased income for charities and voluntary sector organisations which must attempt to meet increasing demand for services with fewer resources.
- What do we know about life on a low income?: A wealth of available statistics on poverty can tell us who is most at risk of experiencing poverty and under what circumstances. However, we know much less about what life is like for people living on low incomes, how their experiences change over time, and how parents manage. We know little about differences in the impact of poverty on mothers and fathers or different types of families, including families affected by disability, step-families, ethnic-minority families and those with kinship care arrangements.

Acknowledgements

This briefing, and the report it is based on, were researched and prepared by Karen Mountney for the About Families team, managed by the Centre for Research on Families and Relationships, with input and advice from Parenting across Scotland, Capability Scotland and an Evidence Review Panel of experts in the fields of families and disability:

Parenting on a low income

Key trends and statistics

Relative poverty: a household with an annual income that is 60% or less of the current average (median) British household income is considered to be living in relative poverty. This is the most commonly used threshold of low income, and is used to define 'low income' in this briefing.

In the UK:

- Household income is forecast to be 7% lower in 2012-13 than it was in 2009-10, and to remain below its 2009-10 level until at least 2015-16.
- Living standards are therefore forecast to fall generally, due to high inflation and weak earnings growth over this period of relative poverty.
- Some 50% of lone parent families are living on low income, more than twice the rate for couples with children.
- More than half of all the children in low-income households have someone in their family in paid work.

In Scotland:

- In 2009/10, 29% of people in deprived areas were in relative poverty before they had to pay housing costs, compared with 15% in the rest of Scotland. However, most people in relative poverty do not live in deprived areas.
- In 2009/10, 19% of individuals in households affected by disability were in relative poverty, compared to 16% for households not affected by disability.

Material impact

Parents experiencing financial hardship ‘do without’ everyday necessities, social activities and holidays, all of which put a strain on parenting. School holidays and special cultural occasions generate extra costs, alongside other seasonal costs such as heating, which pressurise budgets. Families affected by disability face additional costs including utility bills, adaptations to housing, transport, clothing, specialist equipment and care services. The cost of suitable accommodation can make holidays unaffordable for many families affected by disability.

Non-material impact

Limited finances can result in feelings of monotony in everyday life, lack of choice, and little opportunity for a sense of privacy or independence, potential interference in parents’ social relationships or disability-related benefits may also increase poverty levels.

Restraint in spending due to relative poverty, many on low incomes, including increased time pressures, concerns about job security, decline in nutrition and higher stress levels. This is combined with decreased income for charities and voluntary sector organisations which must attempt to meet increasing demand for services with fewer resources.

Recession and welfare reform

The recent recession has generated additional burdens for people already living on low incomes, including increased time pressures, concerns about job security, decline in nutrition and higher stress levels. This is combined with decreased income for charities and voluntary sector organisations which must attempt to meet increasing demand for services with fewer resources.

What would help? A range of improvements would help parents on low incomes to manage resources, balance work and care and access services, including: affordable and appropriate childcare; holistic and family-oriented services; accessible and affordable facilities; co-ordinated and flexible support; support in accessing benefits; help with employability skills; job flexibility; and more involvement of parents in service planning.

Research on parenting on a low income

This briefing is based on a longer report. A range of publications were drawn on, including literature reviews of existing research, qualitative and quantitative research findings, Scottish and UK Government reports, research and reports by the third sector, as well as statistical data. Also, a survey and interviews were conducted with disabled parents and parents of disabled children.
